Healthcare Ready Announces Leadership Transition, Reaffirms Commitment to Mission and Resilience

[Washington DC] — Healthcare Ready, a leading organization dedicated to strengthening the resiliency of communities before, during, and after disasters, today announced a leadership transition. Executive Director Tom Cotter has chosen to resign and pursue new opportunities.

Healthcare Ready is dedicated in its commitment to advancing the organization's mission. Guided by a robust network of partnerships across government, nonprofit, and medical supply chain sectors, Healthcare Ready will continue to help ensure communities have the resources and support they need to navigate crises and build resilience.

"With transition comes opportunity, and Healthcare Ready remains focused on bringing forward new solutions that meet the needs of the most vulnerable populations," said Phyllis Arthur, Chair of the Board of Directors. "Our strength lies in our dedicated team, our multi-sectorial partnerships, and our focus on improving the resiliency of communities across the nation."

During this interim period, the organization will rely on its experienced leadership team and talented staff to ensure continuity of operations and mission-driven initiatives.

Healthcare Ready's pillars of crisis response, research, and resilience remain at the forefront of all efforts. From addressing the challenges of supply chain disruptions to providing critical resources during public health emergencies, the organization continues to be a trusted partner in times of need.
